21. S. after Trinity (BWV 109, 38, 98, 188: one from each surviving Leipzig cantata cycle)

*Eph. 6:10-17 (The armor of the Christian)

*Jn. 4:46-54 (Christ heals the son of a royal official)

Librettist: Unknown

FP: 29 October 1724 (St. Nicholas); part of the chorale cantata cycle (see side note). Martin Petzoldt notes that few hymnals designate this chorale (Luther's 1524 paraphrase of Psalm 130) for this Sunday; Alfred Dürr writes that in Leipzig it had long been assigned to this Sunday. The tune is of medieval origin. See Petzoldt, "Bach Kommentar" 1:596; Dürr/Jones, "The Cantatas of J. S. Bach," 602; Christoph Wolff, "Bach's Musical Universe," 128.

Cantata No. 38

Aus tiefer Not schrei ich zu dir

The first movement (stanza 1 of Luther's paraphrase of Psalm 130:1-3) personalizes the cry of the royal official in the Gospel reading. Perhaps because the chorale tune is in the phrygian mode, Bach writes a traditional motet-like setting in the traditional stile antico: alla breve meter, 4-part writing with instruments doubling the voices (including trombones as was customary in archaic style). The continuo is somewhat independent (particularly where the bass voice drops out). Each chorale phrase is prepared with a fugato in the lower 3 voices, then presented by the soprano in long notes. The motet-like approach also precludes a ritornello.

"Freudigkeit" comes from the Middle High German word "freidigkeit," meaning boldness or confidence. See Luther's 1545 translation of Acts 4:13 and Philemon 1:8. Such confidence is reflected in the day's Epistle reading concerning the spiritual armor of the believer.

Da capo aria. The poem has a rhyme scheme of ABCCBA, which Bach divides as AB-CCBA da capo. Bach repeats lines 1 & 2 three times, 3 to 6 twice plus line 6 once more. See side note.

Bach depicts two competing ideas/emotions with various devices: parallel thirds & fauxbourdon, syncopations with figura corta coinciding with unexpected chord changes on the off-beat, chromaticism, dissonant suspensions, long notes, and ambiguity of meter to portray the paradox of abiding comfort of God's Word in the midst of long suffering. Parallel 3rds & fauxbourdon (sweetness), syncopations with figura corta (joy) contrast with chromaticism, suspensions, and long descending lines (sorrow) to depict the concept of divine comfort in the midst of human suffering. The paradox is reinforced with unexpected chord shifts at the syncopations/figura corta and 3/2 meter superimposed on common time.

The aria completes a train of thought that could logically be concluded with a chorale. Instead, the librettist provided a recitative that responds to the aria, decrying a lack of faith. See Petzoldt, "Bach Kommentar" 1:598–99.

Although the recitative does not paraphrase any stanza of the underlying chorale, Bach hides the chorale tune in consultation with the librettist). The 3rd stanza was probably intended, as it functions in dialogue with the aria and the recitative. See Petzoldt, "Bach Kommentar" 1:598-99.

Chromatic saturation in the voice part in 10 mm., the chromaticism depicting the "weak faith" referenced in the text.

Stollen 1 of chorale's bar form is in A phrygian; the rest is in D phrygian.

Continuo plays the chorale (slightly modified). Martin Petzoldt suggests the implied chorale stanza is no. 3, given here.

The contrast between the anguished chromaticism and the inflexible rhythm perhaps illustrates the inner conflict between doubt and faith. See Petzoldt 1:599.

Allusion to Jesus' words in the day's Gospel: "Unless you see signs and wonders you will not believe" (John 4:48).

Word painting: Melisma for "morning," like a nightingale?

The opening of the quasi-ostinato figure is inverted to suggest a morning wake-up call, depicting hope coming in the morning as referenced in the text, which alludes to biblical passages such as Psalm 130:6, "My soul waits for the Lord more than watchmen for the morning" and Psalm 30:5, "Weeping may tarry for the night, but joy comes with the morning."

"Morning's comforting rescue" is depicted with a wake-up call (inversion of the ritornello's opening), later also the ritornello's ostinato theme as a whole, along with a tonal ascent "sharpward" in the circle of fifths (mm. 70–82).

For "this night of distress and anxiety," the soprano and alto sing descending chromatic lines again, while the bass sings rising lines with figura corta, including the "rescue" figure of m. 57–58. See also Eric Chafe, "Tonal Allegory," 220–221.

Text painting: "Night of distress and anxiety" set with much dissonance.

At "wie bald" (how soon or how quickly), the suddenness of the rescue is depicted with material from mm. 55–56 (there, "wie plötzlich" i.e., how suddenly). It is followed by the "rescue" figure" from mm. 57–58 (now associated with morning).

Regarding the effect of ending chorale cantatas with a simple, 4-part setting, see side note.

First bass note links to concluding bass and key of foregoing movement (D). It is very unusual to begin a chorale with a dissonance. See side note for more.

Ending on the dominant (as the cadential endings of nos. 1 and 4) is a consequence of the modal chorale tune. See side note.
