It is noteworthy that every stanza begins with the same line, which functions as a motto.

BWV 100 is a chorale cantata that retains the chorale text (but not the melody) in each movement ("per omnes versus"): the 1674 chorale is by Samuel Rodigast (1649–1708). For more about Bach's chorale cantatas that follow this model, see note. A liturgical designation of 12th Sunday after Trinity is plausible, since each of the chorale stanzas begins with the line that paraphrases Mark 7:37 ("He has all things well"), which comes from the Gospel reading for that Sunday. This chorale appears to have been one of Bach's favorites (see note).

Cantata No. 100 III

Was Gott tut, das ist wohlgetan

The form is symmetrical (see note for more):

- |                     |   |                     |
|---------------------|---|---------------------|
| 3. S aria, 6/8, Bm  | — | 5. A aria, 12/8, Em |
| 2. AT duet, 4/4, DM | — | 4. B aria, 2/4, GM  |
| 1. Chorus, 2/2, GM  | — | 6. Chorus, 4/4, GM  |

In this cantata Bach recalls two movements written a decade earlier (nos. 1 & 6).

The ritornello is followed by a concertino group of flute, oboe d'amore, violin, and continuo, the oboe d'amore and violin I playing the opening theme with the flute supplying a "heavenly" figuration. The chorale is embedded chordally in an instrumental concerto texture, the soprano & horn playing the tune in long notes.

The flute's entrance is unexpected. Its filigree perhaps suggests heavenly concord with the sentiments of the chorale.

Chorale line 2.

The disjunct duples of the vocal bass line in mm. 33–35 continue the pattern of the continuo in the previous 2 measures. The singer's line is an embellished version of its counterpart in mm. 68–70 when the music of Stollen 1 is repeated for Stollen 2. The line suggests the first phrase of the chorale "Herzlich tut mich verlangen nach einem selgen End" (My heart is filled with longing to have a blessed end). Bach's reason for writing the line in a more embellished form here in its first appearance (doubling the accents) may be to hammer home the words in a rhetorical manner: "His will remains just." It is noteworthy that both BWV 99 and 100 have duples in the vocal bass here (matching the continuo), whereas at mm. 83–84, only BWV 99 has them in both lines (BWV 100 dispenses with the duples in the vocal bass).

Alfred Dürr writes, "The Abgesang introduces new groupings. Passages assigned a tutti function [now include woodwinds]—a true instrumental tutti—and the flute occasionally yields its figurative concertante role to the oboe. Consequently, the instrumental postlude is not identical with the opening ritornello, as it is in most cases: the tutti-solo succession is abandoned and the concertino passages are instead incorporated within the tutti complex." See The Cantatas of J. S. Bach, translated by Richard Jones (New York: Oxford University Press, 2005), p. 538.

Tenor and bass are different from the model (BWV 99/1). The tenor in m. 83 is more complicated than in BWV 99 and the text underlay in 83-84 different. The result is a 4-fold statement of "weiß" ("knows") instead of 3-fold (as in BWV 99) and all three lower voices arriving at the accented syllable of "erhalten" ("sustain" or "preserve" in m. 84).

In stanzas 1, 5, and 6, the final line acts as a conclusio. Bach accordingly pauses before it, as if giving time for reflection.

Chorale line 8.

As in m. 33, the bass line's disjunct duplets imitate the pattern of the continuo in the previous 2 measures, suggesting a rhetorical emphasis on the words: "Therefore I will just allow him to rule."

Note: Bach's musical setting does not follow the bar form of the chorale stanza. Instead, he builds the movement on a scalar quasi-ostinato bass (stated 16 times), which (together with a thematically independent, imitative duet) depicts God's leading on ultimately beneficial paths. By joining the second Stollen with the first two lines of the Abgesang, Bach follows the syntax of the text.

The ritornello and vocal part hint at the chorale tune, now in the minor mode.

Virtuosic flute obbligato, whose "heavenly" stream of 32nd notes suggest the elixir offered by the Great Physician as referenced in the text. The part suggests that Bach had a very accomplished player at his disposal.

The ritornello and vocal part hint at the chorale tune, now in the minor mode.

Note: Bach's musical setting does not follow the bar form of the chorale stanza. Instead, he sometimes repeats and/or joins text lines (sometimes taking them out of chronological order) to communicate particular aspects of the text. In rhetorical manner, the singer emphasizes different words upon their repetition, resulting in a multifaceted interpretation of the text and rhythmic irregularities. Of particular note is the way Bach joins the second Stollen with the first line of the Abgesang, then repeats the lines, to stress that the Good Physician will "not pour poison as medicine" (see mm. 34–43). Also noteworthy is the six-fold statement of line 1.

Noteworthy is the way Bach joins the second Stollen with the first line of the Abgesang, then repeats the lines to stress that the Good Physician will "not pour poison as medicine" (mm. 34–43). The final lines are also repeated (in various combinations) for rhetorical effect. The movement is thus ultimately bipartite.

Although Alfred Dürr argues that "the clearly articulated formal structure AABC...forges an especially close link with the Bar form of the chorale" (The Cantatas of J. S. Bach, 793), it is noteworthy that Bach repeats and/or joins text lines (sometimes taking them out of chronological order) to communicate particular aspects of the text. The last 3 lines of the chorale stanza receive particular attention. For more, see note.

(F# major)      B minor      B7

This type of aria is called a "Devisenarie" (a term coined by Hugo Riemann) or "motto aria." After the ritornello, the singer presents the first phrase of the aria as a kind of motto. This is followed by a short instrumental bridge before the aria proper begins. The motto sets the tone (and the literary perspective) for the movement. Thus the motto phrase of the chorale as a whole becomes the devise of the aria. However, it is noteworthy that the final line of the stanza is stated five times and thereby given particular emphasis.

Alfred Dürr writes, "The concluding chorale [music] originally ended each half of Cantata 75, Die Egenden sollen essen, Bach's Leipzig inaugural music. Evidently the plain concluding chorale of Cantata 99 was considered inadequate to the festive occasion of the new cantata, hence Bach's decision to borrow from elsewhere a movement with independent orchestral parts, and even to enrich its instrumentation. By this means he created a better balance with the opening movement, and only the scrupulously attentive listener is aware that the slight change to the chorale melody (its fifth note now rises to the sixth degree) indicates that the first and last movements are derived from different sources." See Alfred Dürr, The Cantatas of J. S. Bach, translated by Richard Jones (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005), p. 792. The choice of a more festive setting of the chorale stanza (along with the addition of horns and timpani altogether) supports the conjecture that the cantata was intended for a wedding rather than for a Sunday in the liturgical year.

Note: This movement differs from its model, BWV 75/14, in its instrumentation and the insertion of extra measures in the ritornellos (seen in the instrumental parts, thought to be for the first performance). While BWV 75/14 is 32 mm. long, 100/6 is 39 mm. in length. See more below.

By increasing the length of no. 6 to 39 measures (by expanding the ritornellos and therefore evident in the autograph parts—the autograph score is still 32 measures), Bach achieved almost perfect parallel proportions between the two halves of the cantata, so that movements 1 to 3 encompass 251 measures, movements 4 to 6 encompass 263 measures. Regarding Bach's preference for symmetrical proportions, see Ruth Tatlow, Bach's Numbers: Compositional Proportion and Significance (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2015). The expanded instrumental material was apparently prepared for the first performance. See Bach-Werke-
